What is a Cohesion Culture?

It's an environment where all employees have a sense of belonging, feel valued and make a commitment to organizational success because their leaders have committed to their success.

0 - 49%

You're in the danger zone.

Your score indicates an organization that is missing opportunities for employees to feel a sense of belonging, where they feel valued, and as a result, are willing to commit mutual success. It is most likely that your team's core values are either ineffective or not understood, so they are not being practiced in positive workday behaviors. There is a good chance that your talent does not see a clear path for career growth within your organization. Don't fret. It is always possible to reshape your culture, so your best employees will want to stay.

50 - 79%

You're on the way (but could use a boost.)

Your score reveals that you have some critical components of a Cohesion Culture in place. That's good. So what could be improved? Here are some questions to ask yourself:

- Can our senior leaders do a better job of actively engaging with employees, so they feel more valued?
- When asked, can a teammate accurately describe our core values?
- Is the mood in our hallways friendly and affirming?
- How well do we understand each employee's personal and professional goals?
- Are we taking advantage of Mentoring Programs, Organizational Internships, and Executive Coaching to build career paths for our talent?

If you lack clarity and vision in your answers, you deserve to chat with Dr. Troy. He can help you understand the Talent Retention Model and apply it to keep your best employees.
